NARROWLY ESCAPES A VIOLENT DEATH

Thomas Joyce Was Struck by Locomotive of the North-Western Accommodation.

Thomas Joyce, who is employed by the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railway, escaped a violent death by a small margin last evening, when he was struck by the engine of the C. & N. W. passenger, Mr. Joyce was at work cleaning out one of the switches near the Five Points at about eight o'clock and while looking at the approaching train did not observe that it was near the track on which he was working. The engineer of the train, No. 511, thought that Mr. Joyce saw the train and did not pay any more attention to him, thinking that he would get out of the way in time.

The engine steps hit him, however, throwing him to one side. He managed to get upon his feet unassisted and later was taken to the St. Charles hotel, where Dr. Nugent attended him. No bones were broken and aside from slight internal injuries and some bad bruising no injury was done. If the train had not been going at a slow rate of speed preparatory to pulling into the depot Mr. Joyce would undoubtedly have been killed by the blow.

OLDEST EX-GOVERNOR REACHES 95 TODAY

Vermont War Governor and Oldest Ex-Governor in the United States Celebrates Birthday.

[SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE.]
Brattleboro, Vt., Feb. 15.—Ex-Governor Frederick Holbrook, who was the war governor of Vermont and is the oldest living ex-governor in the United States, was ninety-five years old today. No public celebration was made of the anniversary, but during the day there were many callers at the Holbrook home and many congratulatory letters were received. In spite of his years Governor Holbrook is still in the enjoyment of fair health and continues to take an active interest in public affairs.

Governor Holbrook was born in Connecticut, February 15, 1813, but his parents returned to Brattleboro while he was an infant, and he has lived here ever since. He was elected by the republicans to the Vermont state senate in 1849 and served one term. He was elected governor of Vermont in 1861 and served until 1863. As war governor he floated $1,500,000 at a premium and equipped many regiments of troops. Governor Holbrook is one of the three surviving war governors of Northern States. The other two are William Sprague of Rhode Island and Samuel J. Crawford, who served as chief executive of Kansas during the closing days of the civil war.

Altogether General Davis spent fifteen years in service on the great lakes, being stationed at various times at Buffalo, Milwaukee and Detroit.

NEWS FORECAST OF THE COMING WEEK

Kansas and Oklahoma Hold Conventions This Week—Hughes Will Speak in Chicago.

[SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE.]
Washington, D. C., Feb. 15.—The disunion of Congress to grapple with the important problems pending in that body will have the subject of politics to occupy first place in public attention during the coming week. Several important conventions and conferences are scheduled for the week, and there will be the usual amount of activity among the presidential aspirants.

Iowa Populists are also scheduled to meet in state convention to select delegates to the national convention at St. Louis. With all important features of a championship competition scheduled, and an entry list comprising many of the leading college and club athletes in the East, the games promised to be the most eventful affair held here this winter.

Relay racing will be a conspicuous part of the program. Efforts to bring Harvard and Yale together in this feature have failed, but nearly all the other leading colleges of the East will be represented. Another leading feature of the carnival will be the two-mile handicap run, with a handicap limit of 150 yards. Geo. Roth and other crack sprinters are entered for this event.

The wedding took place at the home of the bride's father, 123 East 25th street, the ceremony being performed by Monsignor M. K. Lavelle, rector of St. Patrick's cathedral. THINK DEMOCRATS ARE FULLY AWAKE

Secretary of the Milwaukee Gathering Is Very Optimistic of Future.

[SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE.]
Milwaukee, Wis., Feb. 15.—W. C. Drayley of Madison, secretary of the democratic state central committee, was about the only one of the democratic house left in the city this morning after the exciting time in the old party Friday. "The democratic party," said Secretary Drayley, "is in excellent shape now to make a vigorous campaign. Nominating papers for the persons named by the convention will be put in circulation at once and the necessary signatures obtained without difficulty. I have not looked up to see the exact number of signatures needed in the state at large and in the several congressional districts, but that is a simple matter. Thanks to the liberality of the delegates the state central committee has a good working capital to start a vigorous fight. The lively fight at the convention will tend, I think, to start up interest of democrats all over the state and will not leave any spots which may jeopardize the interests of the party. Our organization in each county is in excellent shape and if it should occur that Aldrich or Foraker of the republican party dominates the republican convention, Bryan will carry Wisconsin as sure as fate. If some other candidate is chosen as the republican standard-bearer, Bryan will get a good big vote in this state just the same."

That there will be a close contest for national commitments from this state when the Wisconsin delegation meets in Denver to make a selection for that post, is probable, and in fact is shown by a careful canvass of the delegates selected by the state convention to the national convention. In the selection of the four delegates at large several are opposed to the selection of Timothy E. Ryan as national commitment. The expression of the convention was also a hard blow to Mr. Ryan's candidacy.

SIX MONTHS FOR TWO CENT RATESRAILROADS ANNOUNCED THEY WOULD GIVE IT THIS TRIAL.

SUITS MIGHT BEGIN NOW

Officials Wait the Reports That Will Come in as Result of Business.

The two-cent fare law has been in effect in Wisconsin six months today.
This was the amount of time which the railroad representatives told the members of the legislature they would allow as a trial of the law and if there is any litigation to be started to contest the validity of the act, on the ground that it is confiscatory property, it will now be started at once.

It is understood here that in spite of a falling off in the railroad receipts, due to a financial stringency, that the roads have so curtailed their expenses that there has been no loss and that the two-cent law will be allowed to remain in effect unmolested.

Complaint in Some Quarters
There is a complaint in some quarters and even an intimation that the matter may go into the courts. A careful canvass of men at the capitol, who are in close touch with the operation of the railroads, reveals the fact that not one has been told that any suit will be started. Scarcely any suit, however, they have heard from other sources there may be suits started, but they believe the rumors to be baseless.

The railroad attorneys, who have been before the railroad commission recently are non-committal on the subject. If a suit were started it would only be on the ground that the earnings had decreased month by month, as compared to last year, and for the service, the roads are not earning a proper amount.

Stringency is Blamed
The financial stringency, which existed over the country during the last three months of 1907, has had a decided effect upon railroad travel. Railroad men testify before the commission three weeks ago, and that there had been a falling off in receipts from 20 to 30 per cent. Trains have been taken off in some instances. Should the railroads take the matter into the courts they would admit to show that under the two-cent fare law, if continued indefinitely, they will be compelled either to materially reduce the number of passenger trains operated; to cut down present expenses in equipment, which are very heavy, or to limit the number of trains.

It is said that the passenger earnings are only from 18 to 20 per cent of the entire earnings of the average road. This is about the relative percentage on the North-Western and Wisconsin Central lines. The balance of 80 per cent of the earnings comes from the freight and express business.

High Heavy Expense
Some of the railroad men say that while the passenger business does not bring returns of over 20 per cent of the whole, the expenses to every road operating first-class passenger trains are between 40 and 50 per cent greater than would be the expense for operating the road for freight alone.

This great difference is shown from the constant expense in keeping up high grade railroads; heavy steel trucks; the finest coach and other rolling stock; more careful maintenance and greater precautions in the movement of trains. The recent decision in the two-cent cases of Pennsylvania, where the law was declared unconstitutional, on the ground that it was confiscatory, has caused many to believe that this might be the outcome in Wisconsin, where the number of passengers carried has been less. The accurate data both of the tax commission and of the railroad rate commission would cause the roads to hesitate for the state has access to data as reliable as is possessed by the roads themselves.

The most encouraging feature of the market for cured stock that occurred recently is the sale of 5500
of the best E. E. Mabbett to a Hensling, Pa., manufacturer at over a satisfactory price. It is the most important transaction since the financial troubles and gives hope that business is getting back to normal conditions.
Hensling & Bitters of Stoughton also sold a couple carloads of '06 at equally fair prices.

Casting weather has come again during the week, bringing the balance of the crop into condition to remove from the sheds for stripping, which will permit growers to get their tobacco handling done before the advent of spring.

Shipments out of storage are picking up again. Something like 500 cases have come forward from this market to all points for the week.

A season of casting weather during the week put the hanging tobacco into condition so that the balance of the crop might be removed from the sheds for stripping. It is doubtful if over half of the crop had been taken down previous to that time, which has proven quite a handicap when buyers call to examine the crop. The chances for selling will be greatly improved now when the balance of the crop is stripped and in the bundle.

The one thing which buyers found in doing was that so few growers had all their tobacco stripped that it was hardly worth the while to keep on the road. When the crop is all ready for inspection the buying movement may reasonably be expected to gain some headway, for enough of the crop has already been sold to establish some sort of a price to work upon.
The large operators say they were only waiting for a completion of the stripping before sending their men out.

STATE COMMISSION

REFUSES TO ACT

Many Places Are Deprived of the Use of Telegraph as a Result of the New Law.

More than fifty Wisconsin communities have been deprived of the use of the commercial and general telegraph service as a result of the new eight-hour law for operators. This was caused by the fact that the railroads, unable to properly keep three operators at many stations, discontinued the telegraph service at those stations altogether. The trains were then blocked straight through to the larger towns and the smaller offices closed up altogether or for the larger part of the day.

Many informal but vigorous complaints were received by the commission and a hearing was held some time ago at which railroad officials of prominence from all the roads operating in Wisconsin were present and gave their testimony. The commission has now issued a review of the testimony and the attitudes appealed show that the reasons advanced by the railroads is practically nothing. The entire average receipts from the forty-one stations affected on the North-Western road amount to only $23.50 a month.

It can be clearly seen from this that the railroads could not be required to keep operators at such stations. After discussing the facts advanced, the commission says that anyone who wishes may file a formal complaint, but although no decision is rendered, it is apparent that the commission feels that nothing can be done.

Members of the Southern Wiscon-office of McVear Bros., decided to hold their first annual poultry show from the fourth to the seventh of January next. A motion was also made and passed to engage Ben S. Myers of Crawfordville, Ind., as the official judge. All the members of the association were present and the prospects for a good exhibition are bright.

Last Evening.

By a score of forty-three to twenty-two the Janesville high school basketball team defeated the U. W. Meteors last evening at the high school gymnasium.

The local team has practically the same one that has represented the high school for the past two years and their superior team work, due to the fact that they have played together so long, was too much for the Meteors. The game was very fast throughout and a good one to watch. The local high school has a strong team and they put up a clever game.

OUR SATURDAY NIGHT

Dan Mahoney is division superintendent of the Southern of Georgia, a railroad between Chattanooga and Atlanta. Dan is a round-faced well-developed Irishman, genial and good-natured, yet, with many years of railroad experience behind him, is fully alive to the best interests of the corporation, which employs him, and renders most loyal service.

The city of Rome, with a population of 20,000 or more, located halfway between the two terminal stations, is the pride of Dan's heart, for northern capital has developed it until it has become a great manufacturing center, and five switch-engines and crews are employed to handle the business of some thirty factories, which, until recently, have done a thriving business.

The Massachusetts Cotton company, with a capacity of 80,000 bales of cotton a year, and employing 2,500 people, is one of the leading industries and it supports a model town, just outside the city. Today every light is out and every spindle idle, and these conditions exist throughout the city, because the great northern syndicate, which has been supplying money, refuses to furnish any more until the people of Georgia come to their senses and stop fighting railroads and other corporations.

The language that Dan uses, in discussing the situation, would not look well in type.

"The Southern of Georgia" had its license revoked, some time ago, and is now doing business without a license. The road had the misfortune to run over a man who was lying drunk on the track. A damage suit resulted in a verdict of $10,000 against the company, which the supreme court reversed.

Then the wise legislature passed a law, denying all railroads in the state the right of appeal, and the first violation was by the "Southern of Georgia." But the road is still doing business, and now the governor and his sons realize their mistake and the present session of the legislature is devoting all of its time in efforts to undo some of the errors committed.

The reform microbes not only infected the legislature, but an epidemic also broke out in some of the cities, and Rome had a violent attack, in which Dan came to the rescue. One of the city fathers lives in a house near the tracks, and he was much annoyed by the air pumps which supplied the engines with air.

One day the alderman appeared on the scene and said to the engineer, "I want you to stop that pump." Dan happened to be present and looking sharply at the city official simply said, "Why?" "Why," came the quick reply, "because it makes so much noise that we can't stand it; that's why." "Then why in h— don't you move?" said Dan.

This was the sort of an argument to which the city official was not accustomed, and looking at the young man with disbelief he said, "Maybe you don't know who I am, I am Alderman Crall from the first ward, and I will bring the matter before the council tomorrow night, and then will see whether you will or won't."

"This was enough to put Dan in action, and extending his hand he said, 'I'm glad to meet you Mr. Crall. My name is Dan Mahoney. Let me tell you something. I have heard of you before and know all about how disagreeable you have made it for the company. You are said to be a good merchant, but you don't know a thing about railroads. If you want that pump stopped, go and stop it, and I will have you arrested in half an hour."

"You don't know enough to know that the government requires every air pump to be tested before an engine is hitched to a train, and, by the way, you might say to the council that the company has decided to move the yards, with the fifty men employed, to a more congenial climate. I'll bid you good day, Mr. Crall," and Dan turned away.

The council met and Dan was invited to be present. He was surprised to learn what a wonderful regard the members had for his company. Alderman Crall was a hot supporter and the yards are still in Rome.

The south has been badly hit by the panic and reform. Many railroad trains have been abandoned, and through trains are running at a loss. Industries are paralyzed. The fires have been drawn from nineteen blast furnaces in Birmingham, and these conditions are typical of all manufacturing centers.

Prohibition is about the only thing which seems to be flourishing, and some of the best friends of the cause claim that in the cities conditions are worse than under the license system.

The native southerner, however, is a genius. He never worries about anything, and so it happens that the men who are on the grilliron today are northern investors who have been attracted to this land of snakes and sunshine by alluring prospects.

Speaking about snakes, they are about as rare in southern Florida as in Wisconsin, but when they do show up it is worth while to pay attention. Mr. George Chahoon, a guest at Cleveland, came in from a quail hunt last Friday, and in addition to a nice bag of quail, he had a black diamond rattler four feet long and as big around as your wrist.

He had flushed a bird and followed it into a heavy palmetto brake. Suddenly the guide heard a rattle and looking down behind them and within two feet was the rattler coiled ready to spring. They jumped away and then the dog came up, but for some reason the snake did not spring, and they soon shot his head off with a charge of No. 8.

The skin is being tanned and will hang in Mr. Chahoon's museum as a pleasant reminder of Florida quail-hunting. This was an unusual experience. Snake bites are of such rare occurrence that they are never thought of, and with ordinary care there is no danger.

The orange and grapefruit crop of Florida is very abundant this year, but the fruit is not very choice and prices are so low that growers are much discouraged. There has been no frost in the central and southern part of the state, and truck farmers are doing remarkably well. A little patch of celery at Sanford, less than half an acre, produced $197 worth and tomatoes are equally profitable.

The east coast, the great pleasure resort of the south, is feeling the effects of depression, and when Mr. Flagler drops out, it is predicted that the popularity of this famous resort will rapidly wane.

Mr. Flagler is the railroad king who has developed it and contributed so largely to its success. He is an old man and it is doubtful if he lives to complete the Key West road, which has long been his hobby.

With a temperature of 76 in the shade, and reports of 25 below in the north, Florida, dry as it is in every way, is a good place to loaf through February and March.

UNION LABORERS INDICTED.
Accused of Violating Sherman Anti-Trust Law in New Orleans.

New Orleans, Feb. 15.—Seventy-two men, representatives of all the classes of labor employed on the New Orleans river front, and who compose a union known as the Dock and Cotton Council, were indicted by the United States grand jury Friday on the charge of conspiring to restrain trade in violation of the Sherman antitrust law.

The indictments followed the refusal of the Dock and Cotton council to permit the Coal Wholesalers' union to coal the steamer Habi, which cleared here several days ago for Puerto Cortez. The agent of the Habi signed an agreement with the union, had his vessel coaled and then placed the matter in the hands of the United States district attorney.

Ridgely Denies Bank Reform.
Washington, Feb. 15.—William Barrett Ridgely, comptroller of the currency, returned from New York, and denied positively that he was about to undertake the reorganization of a suspended Kansas City bank. The comptroller said he had not even been offered the presidency of the concern.

Curbs Drinking on Trains.
Columbus, O., Feb. 15.—Gov. Harris Friday signed the Rathbun bill prohibiting the drinking of intoxicants on trains, except in compartments or cars where the same are sold, and it takes effect at once. Violation of the law is made a misdemeanor punishable by fine.

Cincinnati Doctor Is Killed.
Cincinnati, Feb. 15.—Dr. Leo Danziger, a prominent German physician, was shot and instantly killed Friday night by Robert Gott, the uncle of Anna Bell Stangler, a 17-year-old girl, at whose bedside the physician was giving medical attention.

American Robbed in Paris.
Paris, Feb. 15.—Charles Hastings, an American mine owner, was robbed here Friday night of a pocketbook containing $6,000 by an expert English pickpocket.

FRED KOHLER, CLEVELAND'S IDEAL POLICE CHIEF.

Cleveland, O., Feb. 15.—President Roosevelt once designated Fred Kohler chief of police of Cleveland, as the best chief he had ever met. As President Roosevelt was a police commissioner once, he ought to know a good chief when he meets one. Chief Kohler is 41 years old, born and bred, and his efficiency has been demonstrated on many occasions, but his somewhat startling ten commandments issued on Christmas day of last year proved him to be in advance of other chiefs over the country. In a form letter sent to every policeman in Cleveland he designated ten rules for their guidance, which are summed up as follows:

The best policeman is the one who manages the offender with the least display of authority.

The policeman who lacks a keen sense of justice frequently punishes those who do not deserve it.

Be sure to mind that the people you deal with are human and not machines.

A kindly feeling is essential to the efficient administration of this police.

With a large body of men the chief cannot personally supervise all, consequently your hearty cooperation as individuals is asked.

This policy will put you into a position that no other American policeman occupies today.

When asked regarding his future policy by a correspondent, he said: "In 1906 I found that we had made about 32,000 arrests for minor offenses, a large proportion of which had resulted in discharges in court. Last year it was almost as many—31,000. I began to think there was something wrong somewhere."

"Young men and boys often do things the gravity of which they do not realize. Many youngsters don't know the difference between being mischievous and breaking the law."

For instance, there was a young man who committed suicide the other day. Why? Nobody knows. He had high social position, but when he was a mere boy he had taken a watch which did not belong to him but to his friend. He was sent to the penitentiary, and he never got over the feeling of that disgrace. If a knifed judge had overlooked that offense the young man, I believe, would have been a credit to the community today.

"It is my judgment that the police throughout the United States, by arresting persons and making the arrests matter of record, have been instrumental in making as many criminals, as any other agency in the world, unless it be environment and heredity. Publicity is given to the arrest of persons who have taken something of trivial value, or committed some other trivial offense; this tends to disgrace and has an inevitable tendency to break down the confidence of the young offender."

"Many young persons who have committed larceny and not been arrested, whose first error has not been exposed, are now respectable citizens, and in some instances the leading business men of the country. With some persons crime is disease, I believe, and lack of proper environment leaves others open to many temptations, and the first slip often results in permanent ruin because some policeman does not know the difference between a thief and a mischievous boy."

The Old Days.
Plenty of people who have not yet become grandparents can remember when nearly every lovely girl was called Molly.

Read the want ads.

The churches have been trying for many hundreds of years to do that. While I have no doubt that without the churches we would be much worse off, they are not strong enough a force now to grapple with this problem the moral tone of the city or the country. Churches of the present day tend to keep off the middle classes the middle class man, and the man beneath him.

"Churches are in many instances aristocratic; continually, in and out of season, asking for money. They never had enough, and never will have. Schools of morality will raise the moral tone of the city. This has been in my mind for many years. Let us add a school of morality to our public school system. There need be no particular creed in it, so that the various sects need not be offended. Let us use the golden rule, which has been preached by almost every great teacher the world has known as a basis of ethics."

ROBERT BARLASS
IS LAID AT REST

Many Friends Gather to Pay the Final Tribute Over the Remains of the Dead.

The funeral of Robert Barlass was held from his late residence in the town of Harmony. A large concourse of people was present to do honor to his memory. The floral tributes were many and beautiful showing the esteem in which he was held. The services were conducted by Rev. F. O. Ross, pastor of the Rock Prairie United Presbyterian church, and Rev. S. G. Huey of St. Louis, a former pastor. The pallbearers were Messrs. Wm. Menzies, John Young, Peter Jameson, John Clark, Andrew James Barlass and F. G. Rumpf.

Robert Barlass was born in Johnston, March 17, 1861. Oct. 5, 1887, he was married to Miss Margaret McFarlane, who survives him. Three children were born to them, Helen P., Robert M. and John M., who are still living. He is also survived by his mother, Mrs. C. M. Barlass of Johnston, a sister, Mrs. D. J. McFarlane, and John Barlass of Bloomington, Ill.

Early in life Mr. Barlass entered the Christian life and united with the Rock Prairie United Presbyterian church. In 1892 the congregation honored him by electing him to the office of ruling elder which office he still held and which he filled efficiently and acceptably. The same year he was chosen Supt. of the Sabbath school which position he filled with marked ability. Under his administration the Sabbath school grew in numbers and efficiency. In all departments of the church's work his influence was felt and in his death the church suffers an irreparable loss. For 13 years he served as financial agent of Wisconsin Presbytery and which office he still held. His kindness, faithfulness and persistency contributed greatly to the success of the local church and in the Presbytery where he was a wise and honored counselor.

As a citizen he was public spirited and aggressive. He was a valuable member of the county board for two terms of which he was still a member. As a father and husband he was kind and indulgent; as a son, loving and tender; as a friend he was loyal and true. In the home, in the church, in the state, there is an empty seat which can never be filled. He was widely and favorably known. His genial disposition and manly qualities drew men to him with bonds of steel. The friends which he made he held. Our loss is his eternal gain. To him to live was Christ, to die was gain.

Mrs. Sophia Ottman.
Mrs. Sophia Ottman who formerly made her home with her son-in-law, A. A. Plink, 16 Milton avenue, died in New York City on February 7. She went east in November to attend the funeral of a son and there contracted a severe cold which settled on her lungs and resulted in her death. Her daughter in this city is the only surviving child and there are two sisters in New York. Mrs. Ottman was sixty-one years old and had a large circle of warm friends in Janesville who will mourn her loss.

Mrs. Martha Anderson.
The funeral of Mrs. Martha Anderson was held this afternoon at two o'clock in the chapel of the Oak Hill cemetery. The Rev. H. C. Denison officiated and the bearers were S. Fredrickson, Albert Howard, John Nelson, and A. Hirsken.

Miss Addie Wood.
Miss Addie Wood died yesterday afternoon at four o'clock at the home of her mother, Mrs. W. B. Wood of 117 North Academy street. The funeral will be held Monday afternoon from the house at two o'clock. The Rev. J. W. Laughlin will officiate and the interment will be in the Oak Hill cemetery.

BEECH HARGIS

Jackson, Ky., Feb. 15.—Beech Hargis, who last week shot his father, lies cowering in his cell. The mother and sister are prostrated with grief, and the father is cold in death. Beech was wayward. During the last few years he has been home very little and only too frequently has the loving and devoted mother gone to some nearby city to pay his fines and get him out of trouble. One week before the tragedy, Beech had drawn a pistol on his father. On that occasion his father had promptly knocked him down. Beech that night in a daze here swore that he would kill his father within a week, and he did.

With the death of Judge Hargis ends one of the most deadly feuds of Kentucky in late years, though the feud had nothing to do with his death. Judge Hargis' two brothers have been shot down in cold blood. For four years Judge Hargis had lived in daily fear of being killed, and during those four years had been constantly in trial for his life as an accomplice in the shooting of Marcus Coghill and Dr. Cox. The judge had spent about $100,000 in defending himself and so far had been successful in being acquitted, but circumstantial evidence points strongly to his knowledge of the plots against these men. Judge Hargis was for years the dominant factor of the democrats in the 10th district of Kentucky, and had amassed a large fortune in business.

NEW INDUSTRY.

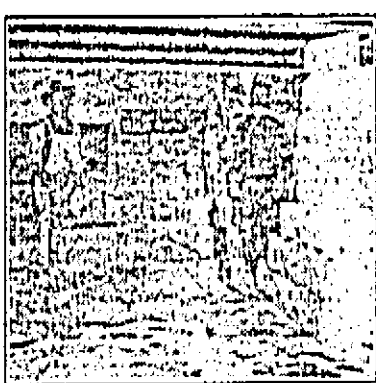

W. J. Hill Secures Patent Concrete Wall Agency.

Mr. Hill has been able to add to his concrete sidewalk foundation, and contracting work, that of making what is to be known as the Riverside Block. This is a building block which promises to revolutionize the science of concrete building.

The blocks are made of white Medusa Concrete and are waterproof. A cup of water poured on an ordinary cement block will be immediately absorbed while the same amount of water poured on a Riverside Block will remain there for hours. This block has several great advantages, chief among them is the fact that it is a two wall system, an outer and an inner wall, a space being left between the two, thus forming a continuous horizontal and vertical air space through which moisture cannot pass. This gives you an inner wall absolutely dry to which plaster and decorations may be applied without furring, and a building in which one may live without danger to health. Where the outer and inner walls are connected in any way the moisture is carried through by capillary attraction which will ruin the decorations and make the building unsanitary. The air space between the two walls is a protection from the cold in winter and heat in summer, which makes the building almost ideal in every respect. The simple machine makes the face down, the entire amount of pressure being upon the face and gives it an advantage over the side faced machine. To satisfy the architects and builders it is necessary to have a machine that will make blocks of sufficient variety of sizes to conform to their needs. With the Riverside Block any design, shape or size can be made 2, 6, and 8 inch faces and all lengths to 21 inches. The local architects have been interviewed by Mr. Hill and they express high approval of the system. By using the blocks a great saving is made as the plastering is done directly on the inner wall, which does away with the lathing. Mr. Hill is now constructing a seven room house with the Riverside Blocks putting in city and soft water, gas and electricity complete at a total cost of $1300. Not only does he sell the Riverside Blocks and the machines to make them, to the public, but he also does a general construction business in all lines of cement work, and at the present time he has five houses under construction and has two more on orders which are for sale on easy payments or they will be rented. In using these blocks it is estimated that at least 25 per cent of the original cost of the house can be saved.

The blocks are for sale to anybody in Janesville at a price, delivered and laid, of 15c per lined foot. Machine rights can be had by applying to Mr. Hill at his residence No. 3 Riverside street. The public is cordially invited to inspect this machine and its work.

EXAMINATION OF
WILLIAM JOYCE

Took Place in Municipal Court This Afternoon—All Spectators Barred Out by Order of Judge Fifield.

William Joyce's examination on the charge of attempted assault was held in municipal court this afternoon. Officer William Mason, the first witness, testified to the effect that the defendant was somewhat intoxicated when brought to the police station about 12:15 on the morning of Feb. 2; that he could walk straight, but seemed dazed, and made the statement that he had never attack anybody if he was "right" and when pressed to explain what he meant by that, gave the officer to understand that he was drunk.

Elmer Nott testified to hearing the girl's screams just after he had crossed the railroad tracks on Academy street; of hearing the girl say, "There come two men," as he and his companion drew near. He said that Joyce was on his knees and the girl was making an effort to get up from the walk when they reached the scene. Frank Brown, who accompanied him, was very much excited and seized Joyce by the arm. The latter kept saying, "Let me explain," and witness detected a strong odor of liquor upon him. The thermometer stood at 2 below zero.

Frank Brown said that he demanded of Joyce, "What does this mean?" and that Joyce said that he had fallen. After they had gone a few feet toward the city hall, witness asked Mr. Nott to hold Joyce and went back and inquired of the girl as to whether or not Joyce had been taking her home. He understood her to reply in the negative. From Joyce's manner of speech he judged him to be intoxicated.

Clara Lemple, the complaining witness, told the court that she was 17 years old last Wednesday and that her parents reside in Edgerton. She said that she saw Joyce at a dance on Saturday evening, Feb. 1, and that he asked to see her home. She told him that she had other company, but he nevertheless joined her as she was passing, unaccompanied, the Grand hotel. They had a lunch at Schmidt's restaurant. As they passed the Yahn residence at 155 North High street, where the witness was rooming, she remarked that it was cold and that she guessed she'd go right and whereat, according to the allegation of the witness, Joyce seized her and threw her down. After her first scream, she alleged that he put one hand over her mouth and commanded her to "shut her mouth." She said she at no time noticed that he had been drinking; that she bit him and strove to keep him away with a hat-pin. The girl stated that she came to Janesville last spring; worked two months as a domestic for Mrs. Julia Myers; washed dishes two weeks in Miller Hallett's restaurant; worked in the Green tobacco warehouse and at Mrs. Will Hyde's residence.

The prosecution was conducted by District Attorney J. L. Fisher, and Atty. T. S. Nolan and E. H. Ryan represented the defendant. The examination was nearing its conclusion at four o'clock.

WHO PAYS FOR THE ADVERTISING?

The contest as carried on in the Gazette during the past week has resulted in our receiving a lot of opinions from lady readers on this question which is of vital interest to every merchant.

The purpose of this contest was to secure the opinion of our lady readers on advertising, which is the greatest factor in present day business getting, as there is such diversity of opinion on the question of advertising.

From the great number of replies we have received it would demonstrate that the people do read the advertising, and proves that it is merely a question of what you put into your ads. as to its pulling power.

There is only room to publish some of the letters received. The following examples each show a little different view:

The First Prize was given to Mrs. M. L. Burchill, 43 North Main street, Janesville. Her reply to the question is as follows:

Janesville, Wis., Feb. 8, 1908.
Editor of Gazette: In my opinion, the increase in the volume of business done, with the same expense, in the same length of time, pays for the advertising.
Yours truly,
MARY.

The Second Prize is awarded to Mrs. F. H. Orrald, Route 1, Janesville, on the following letter:

Janesville, Feb. 10, 1908.
Gazette Publishing Co.
Dear Sirs: In regard to the question "Who Pays for the Advertising?" my opinion is that the merchant pays for advertising out of the extra profits that he makes by advertising; for the merchant that advertises sells so much more during the year than the non-advertiser, that he can pay for advertising and still have more net profits at the end of the year than the non-advertiser does.
SUNRISE.

The Third Prize is awarded to A. L., 52 Cherry street, on the following letter:

Any man, even though he be as blind as the proverbial bat, ought to see that it is the non-advertiser who pays for the advertising. He pays for it in loss of patronage, and loss of patronage means loss of money to any business. That which is his loss is the advertiser's gain, and the gain of a few customers soon repays the money spent in advertising. To outsiders it looks as though the non-advertiser did not care whether anyone purchased his goods or not—as though he said, "Well, I'm here, and if you want to patronize me, all right; if you don't, ditto." Meanwhile the advertiser has his little "ad." in the paper, and nine out of ten prospective customers trade with him rather than with the too-independent personage who does not care enough for their trade to invite it. The loss of a few customers to Mr. Advertising Man soon pays the fifty dollars spent in advertising, and increases the profits at an alarming rate.
"GENEROUS."

Each one of the letters show marked thought upon the question and show the intelligence of the buying public upon this vital question.

The public is not allowed to scramble behind the counters and therefore advertising is necessary to let the people know what is for sale.
—Mrs. A. D. Vertise.

The Janesville Daily Gazette.
Dear Sir: My opinion who pays for the advertising is "The Janesville Daily Gazette," for with the aid of this paper, that reaches so many homes, the people can find out what the merchant, or anyone, has for sale, rent, want, lost or found. Those people want their goods advertised for the public to read and profit by them, for they are not allowed behind the counters, or in your home, to scramble over your goods like mice, hunting for what they want, and it is up to the Gazette Printing Co. to put their goods in first-class advertisements and get their paper before the public and keep it there, as they are always working for new advertisers and subscribers for an interest.
MRS. A. D. VERTISE.

The profits derived pay for the advertising.—"Reader of the Gazette Advertisements."

Who pays for the advertising done in the Janesville Gazette? It is my opinion that the profits derived from advertising in this paper, mentioned above, more than pay the cost of the advertisements. I am sure you cannot fail to agree with me in this, for it is true every time. I think that this answer is sufficient, for it is the only honest one that can be found to the above question.
READER OF THE GAZETTE ADVERTISEMENTS.

Consumers profit by reading Gazette ads.—"Hazel Kirk."

Who Pays for the Advertising?
In my opinion when you advertise in the Gazette, the Gazette pays for it by placing it attractively before thousands of readers, who as consumers long ago realized they profited by reading the Gazette ads.
The business man of today does not ask how much will I have to pay for this ad., but rather "How much and how soon will it pay me?" By that he means how soon and how many will read it? The Gazette with its large and increasing circulation, gained by years of hustling, up-to-date and honest business methods, is able to guarantee to its advertisers early and good payment.
So we, as the advertiser, consumer or casual reader of the Gazette, all gain and the Gazette must pay by keeping up its "hustling" or else, like the non-advertiser, it will see the "other man" doing the "paying" and reaping the harvest.
HAZEL KIRK.

Advertising is a benefit to the public, in the opinion of "B. B."

Who pays for the advertising?
I should say that advertising pays for itself—not only pays for itself, but pays the business man, by increasing his trade and thereby his profits.
Advertising also benefits the public by bringing to their notice things they should know for their good. By its aid help is found, positions are obtained, the lost is found, etc. Therefore, taking all things into consideration, advertising much more than pays for itself. Do your advertising in the Janesville Gazette.
B. B.

The non-advertiser's stock is not known, neither are his prices.—"M. E."

Who pays for the advertising?
To the general observer the consumer pays for it when he buys the goods. The practical man who is a keen observer and runs his regular advertisements, day after day, puts his goods and prices before the public so it will be a common saying, "See tonight's paper and see what Doe Bros. have got in that line." Then the even chances are that they will telephone their order. Do you ever know what Mr. Doe has in stock and about his prices? Maybe some of your neighbors have told you what he has and maybe not. Do you ever see any prices of his? Yes, on boxes and barrels in front of his store. How often do you pass his store, and would you know he was in business if you did not pass? The Doe Bros. pay each month for advertisements $50.00. Daily sales average $150.00. Mr. Doe pays 10 cents for paint and 8 cents for brush and with this 18 cents worth of advertising attracts daily sales of $250.00. We would think that Mr. Doe pays for his competitor's advertising.
M. E.

Advertising pays for itself and more.—"M. J. Solomon."

Who pays for advertising? That's a live question.
But it can be solved by plain vision.
Just cut it up fairly and find out the facts.
You will then surely see who it is pays the tax.
It is not the printer who spills so much ink.
He is paid for his labor, that's what we think.
It is not the merchant whose courage is small.
And who pays for ads just nothing at all.
Though his sales are as small as his courage, you see,
He pays not the printer, Oh, no, not he!
Now the merchant who pays good money for ink,
Gets it back again double and treble we think.
The verdict is plain (you've heard it before).
Advertising pays for itself, and more!
M. J. SOLOMON.

The consumer pays for the advertising, but is willing because she saves in the long run.—"A. D. Vertise."

Who pays for the advertising? I do, And who am I, you say? Let me first tell you who I am not. I am not the one who never reads a newspaper. I am not the one who never reads anything new. I am not the one who never cares for style. I am not the one who does not admire pretty things. I am not the one who, having eyes, sees nothing. I am not he who hears with his ears. But I am alive to my opportunities. When I need, I buy, and before buying I read the newspapers. If a merchant never advertises I conclude that his stock is old and not what the trouble. I do not want that kind. I want the newest, the prettiest, the best, and I am willing to pay for it. I go and buy of the merchant who has what I want, I therefore pay for the advertising, and I am willing to do so. See?

The paper man pays for the advertising.—"Hazel North."

THE BANKRUPT MERCHANT.

"I am ruined, I am ruined," He cried in despair.
As he threw his arms high in the air.
With my silks and satins all in a row,
Linen and olefinths out for show,
I am sure they're as fine as the best in the land.

Why no one will buy them I can't understand.

To advertise I don't see much good,
For the money it would cost me
Would buy lots of wood.

However I'll try it just for this once
To see if to advertise will bring back the price.

He wrote out his list which read like this:
Cloaks and furs at half price today,
Gingham and muslin at nine cents we'll say;

Olefinths and carpets and underwear, too,
We sell very cheap and reasonable to you.

He went to the office and handed it in,
And told them to print it and charge it to him.

Next day when the doors opened, oh! what a rush,
With women and children all in a hush;

Men and boys, slender and tall,
Were waiting their turn out in the hall.

Shirting and muslin were sold by the ton,
Everything went, even to cloaks.

Oh! what a grand success, he cried,
And it all came because I advertised.

Next is the question, who pays the bill?
For it is not I, but the paper man still.

A good advertisement shows energy and serves as a guide to the reader.—"Ad. Reader."

In this age of hustle and competition to make a success in business it is necessary to advertise. A good advertisement shows energy in the advertiser and serves as a guide to the readers. If we wish to buy, sell or rent a house, engage help, or obtain a situation, we turn to the advertisements in our local papers for assistance. From the advertisements of merchants we get many helpful suggestions as to what we should buy and where. Therefore, it is my opinion that the business men who do not advertise are the ones who pay for the advertising through lack of patronage.
AD READER.

The non-advertiser pays the bill, says "Miss Add Reader."

Janesville, Wis., Feb. 11, 1908.
The Gazette: In answer to your question, "Who pays for the advertising?" I would say the non-advertiser, because the merchant who advertises gets his money back by drawing more customers to his store and the merchant who does not advertise does not know as many customers. The majority of the people never know what the non-advertiser has to sell, therefore the people buy of the merchant that advertises and the non-advertiser pays his advertising bill.
Yours truly,
MISS ADD READER.

Cannot do business in a live, up-to-date way without advertising.—"Curly."

The merchant pays for the advertising, but it pays him providing he is properly advertised. It is just as essential as a show-case to display his goods. He cannot do business in a live, up-to-date way without advertising.

Your two examples are hardly a fair comparison, as the non-advertiser would not be apt to pay as much for help as the man who advertised and did a larger percentage of business, he would not need it.

A merchant who advertises to do great things just to get a crowd into his store and does not meet them with the goods advertised, is soon spotted, and his ads. are not the kind to keep bringing crowds.

But let a merchant be known to furnish the goods he advertises, at the price he advertises, and he has got the crowd coming his way. He must gain their confidence, and then sell them enough other goods to make up. It is a poor clerk that will try to sell only the goods that there is no profit in. It is the amount of other goods sold while they have the customer there, that enables a merchant to keep advertising.

Reading of ads. saves enough to more than pay for subscription.—"Add Reader."

The increase of trade pays for the advertisement, or in other words, the people pay it. "A. M. V. says I read the Gazette ads. each night and make my purchases the following day. If possible, by so doing I save enough I think to more than pay my subscription to the Gazette, get up-to-date goods and pay my share of the ad."

The non-advertiser again.—"Kathryn Johnson."

Janesville, Wis., Feb. 13, 1908.
Editor of the Gazette.
Sir: My opinion with regard to who pays for the advertising is, that the non-advertiser really pays for the advertising, because his gain is much less than the advertiser's after the amount for advertising was deducted.
Respectfully yours,
Kathryn Johnson.

Non-advertiser has poor business ability thinks "E. M. V."

My opinion of who pays for the advertising:
I note the merchant who did advertise in the Gazette cleared four hundred dollars more than the one who did not. The merchant who did not advertise his business in the Gazette failed to get his share of patronage. The fact that the Gazette has the largest circulation of any paper in Southern Wisconsin proves it to be the most popular and reliable business medium in the county. The merchant who through poor business ability fails to let the thousands of Gazette readers know of the bargains at his store must expect to have a dead business and cheerfully pay for the ad of his successful competitor.

The fact that the non-advertiser pays for the advertising of his advertising competitor seems undeniable.—"Auntie Handbill."

To the Editor: The fact that the non-advertiser merchant pays for his enterprising rival's advertising seems undeniable. Not only does he make fewer sales and less profit in a year, but he suffers an actual loss through his goods spoiling or going out of date, while the advertiser keeps his on the move. With the exception of "making good" on his promises, there is nothing that establishes a desirable reputation for a merchant more surely than an attractive "ad." in the leading paper (in other words, The Gazette). "Dodgers" seldom reach the real buyer. They are blown from porches, carried off by the children, or gathered up with almanacs and samples of pills, and burnt as rubbish, while every shopper looks over the Gazette before doing any important trading. This is especially true of the country trade, and the average city buyer is far too busy to hunt in the waste basket for a handbill when the Gazette is always at hand. So the poor sleepy non-advertiser pays, not only in money, but in reputation, for his wide awake competitor's advertising.
AUNTIE HANDBILL.

The non-advertiser of Janesville and merchants of nearby towns pay for the advertising in loss of patronage.—"X. Y. Z."

Janesville, Wis., Feb. 12, 1908.

Editor Gazette: In answer to the question "Who pays for the advertising in the Gazette?" I will say that it is the non-advertising merchants in Janesville and the merchants of the nearby towns. As proof of same let us divide the merchants of Janesville into two classes, and suppose that each class has an annual gross profit of $20,000 and an expense of $5,000, leaving an annual net profit of $15,000. One class advertises in the Gazette at an expense of $1,200 per annum. We will estimate their sales at a fair increase of $5,000, making their gross profits $25,000. Their extra expense would be $1,200 and perhaps $500 for additional clerk hire, making expense $6,700, leaving a net profit of $18,300 and a gain of $3,300 per annum. The merchants of the nearby towns probably lost one-half of the $5,000, and the non-advertising merchants of Janesville the balance, or $2,500, making their gross profits $17,500 and net profits $12,500, a loss of $2,500.
We, therefore, find that the merchants of the nearby towns pay $600 and the non-advertising merchants of Janesville the remaining $600, with an additional loss of $1,900.

Advertising pays for itself, says "Alvio."

Janesville, Wis., Feb. 7, 1908.
Dear Editor: Who Pays for the Advertising? Advertising pays for itself. As the merchant who wisely advertises in the Gazette has the maximum of business with the minimum of expense, so the merchant who is wise will surely advertise. Besides being the cure for most of human ills, it gives satisfaction by paying its own bills. Merchants who advertise in the Gazette surely will never have any cause for regret.
ALVIO.

The non-advertiser pays for the advertising in lack of patronage.—"A Guesser."

Edgerton, Wis., Feb. 12, 1908.
Messrs.: In answer to "Who Pays for the Advertising?" my candid opinion is, the merchant who does not advertise is the man who pays for the advertising of the merchant who does advertise. For the merchant who does advertise gets so much more trade away that the merchant who does not advertise would have had, had he advertised.
"A GUESSEER."

Goods of the non-advertiser are not known, is the opinion of "Golden Locks."

Broadhead, Wis., Feb. 10, 1908.

The Janesville Gazette.
Dear Editors: I noticed in your paper, "The Janesville Gazette," the question, "Who Pays for the Advertising?" Well, my opinion is, that the people, that is, the consumers of the advertiser's goods pay indirectly for them. Although the advertiser pays $50 or so each month for advertising, his profits are larger than the merchant who did not advertise. The advertiser puts his goods up in the paper and enlightens the people as to what he has, while the people can tell nothing about the non-advertiser's goods until he goes to the store. The advertisements inserted in the Janesville Gazette are sure to be read, as many homes in Janesville and surrounding community are taking it. The people who are contemplating on buying any goods or things for their homes will read the columns of the Gazette in regard to advertisements. He will then have some idea of the goods of the merchant who advertises, and at the same time the prices are the same as the non-advertiser. Thereby the advertiser will have more trade and larger sales, and enable him to pay for advertising.
GOLDEN LOCKS.

The psychology of advertising.—"Beatrice Hope."

"Who Pays for the Advertising?"

In answer to this question I submit these lines.

The supposition is, that the advertising is successful.

To me it appears that a distinction may be made between him who pays directly and him who pays indirectly. The advertising merchant pays directly by money and mental energy. Indirectly the subscribers of the Gazette pay for it inasmuch as they pay for all legible matter contained therein.

Yet, another explanation is plausible—advertising pays for itself. But what may this mean? I may be permitted an explanation. The advertisement, like a successful salesman, creates a want or informs a man of its presence. Each reader peruses the ads, affecting his interests. The intellect accepts the sensory evidence; the reason acts upon this, then the judgments may result thus: this is very cheap, prices may rise; that's something new, I like it, etc.

The will, whose object is goodness, or that which is good, may, then, choose to buy something of that which the ad. makes known, thus the advertisement is crowned with success by attaining the end of its creation—the increase of business.
BEATRICE HOPE.

Advertising is a Saving because in the case given it enabled the merchant to make twice the amount of sales from the same expense of rent, salaries, and incidental expenses. A good merchant makes a profit on every sale. His expenses for rent, salaries, and incidentals are fixed, whether he makes sales or not. The more sales he makes, the smaller the expense in proportion to each sale, and therein is the saving. [Moral]—It Pays to Buy Advertised Goods.

The Gazette absolutely guarantees the accuracy of the circulation statements, and the books and press room are open at any time to any one who desires to investigate. Circulation yesterday was 4186. Circulation one year ago today was 3496. An increase in circulation of almost 20 per cent. Phone 77-2 Rings for a Representative.

body revealed no marks which would tend to throw light on the exact manner of the woman's death, beyond a slight bruise near the right knee and one near the foot, which might easily have been sustained by contact with the wall and frame of the cot when she was in the throes of death.

So far as can be learned, no one has sought out Albert Larson of Slough-ton, former husband of Mrs. Anderson, who is said to have ground the razor belonging to her some time ago. It is possible that he would be able to clear up all doubt as to whether or not the instrument found on the right side of the cot was the same one she kept for paring corners.

Those who still cling to the murder mystery find it difficult to account for the position of this instrument, indicating, as it did, a cut from left to right. The "left-handed assassin" supposition is not very tenable. On the other hand, while the great majority of people are convinced it was a case of suicide, no plausible explanation of the broken glass and the torn screen of the auto door has been advanced, excepting the one which admits an intruder with theft as his sole mission.

FRANK HITCHCOCK TO PUSH
TAFT CAMPAIGN.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 15.—Coupled with the news of the split in the republican convention in Florida which has aroused the deepest interest among politicians here, comes the authorized announcement of the retirement on Feb. 15 of Frank H. Hitchcock as first assistant postmaster general. He will become associated with the Taft presidential boom in the capacity of general adviser.

Mr. Hitchcock will have offices in Washington, and his activities will not be confined to any section of the country. He will not supersede Arthur I. Vorys of Ohio, the man first chosen to manage the Taft campaign, but it is understood there will be no general manager for Secretary Taft except himself. Mr. Hitchcock will be succeeded in the postoffice department by Charles P. Grandfield, at present chief clerk in the office of the first assistant.

Mr. Hitchcock's association with the Taft forces has been foreshadowed since late in December, soon after the return of the secretary from his trip around the world. He had a conference with Mr. Taft on the subject. Since then conflicting reports had been floating about. Mr. Hitchcock said this afternoon:

"I have accepted the invitation of friend of Secretary Taft to take part in the campaign for his nomination. I should have retired from the postoffice department some time ago in order to get into this work but for the fact that the postoffice appropriation bill was under way in the house."

NORTH FRANKLIN STREET

United States battleship destroyed in the harbor of Havana, February 15, 1898.

Picture at upper right is that of the new battleship Maine which was constructed to replace the one destroyed. Picture in center below is the wrecked Maine as it appears in Havana harbor today. Below that on the right is shown cemetery in which the brave heroes, who died in the Maine explosion, were buried at Havana. Below that is shown a fac simile of telegram sent by Capt. Charles Dwight Sigbee on the night of the explosion. At the left is picture of Capt. Charles Dwight Sigbee.

This is the 10th anniversary of the destruction of the battleship Maine in the harbor of Havana, the 10th anniversary of that explosion which was indirectly responsible for the Spanish-American war; the 10th anniversary of the sacrifice of the lives of a host of American seamen to the gods of anarchy or accident—which, the 10 years have failed to definitely establish. Ten years is a long span of time, and yet the story of the Havana holocaust still echoes in the ears of America as though the reports were but of yesterday. This 10th anniversary should be fully celebrated in every American heart by a prayer of praise to heaven that other Maine disasters have not occurred, and by a poem of honor and glory for those patriotic martyrs who gave up their lives beneath the stars and stripes.

Ten years tonight at 9:40, as the United States battleship Maine quietly lay at anchor in Havana harbor, and while the sailors and officers were peacefully sleeping, occurred the explosion which caused the death of 250 of the United States brave officers and sailors. The report of the explosion, echoing and re-echoing ever louder, sounded the death-knell to Spanish tyranny in Cuba and established the Monroe doctrine of "America for Americans" forever.

Now that we are able to gauge the real results more clearly after 10 years have elapsed, who is there who would not again go through the anguish of this disaster and resultant war to accomplish the end which was gained? where it was only yesterday.

The United States has "taken up the white man's burden." We advanced civilization and gave liberty not only to Cuba, but the Philippines. The United States gained a prestige as a world power which it deserved, but could not have attained but on the battlefield. We glory in the deeds of heroism of the war which followed the disaster of February 15 but nowhere was there more bravery shown than on the battleship Maine 10 years ago tonight.
